

Acknowledgements

My sincere thanks to the supervisors of the Butte Soil and Water Conservation District Board who supported and encouraged the development of this manual. Special thanks to Jack Jensen, former board supervisor, rancher, and strong supporter of stockmanship.

My sincere appreciation to Idaho NRCS State Conservationist Richard Sims, State Range Conservationist Jim Cornwell and Public Affairs Specialist Sharon Norris for their support and help in producing this manual.

Thanks to Peter Donovan of Enterprise, Oregon, who was instrumental in providing ideas and organization. He traveled far and wide and spent summers herding in order to help make this manual as high quality as possible.

My deepest level of appreciation and admiration goes to Bud and Eunice Williams who have sacrificed much as they dedicated their lives to developing and teaching their wonderful way of producing healthy and remarkably controllable animals. This book contains some of my experiences with Bud's method regarding solving livestock handling problems on the range.

Roger Ingram, Extension Livestock Specialist in Auburn, California, has been so helpful in advising and encouraging me on this project and providing photos of livestock handling.

Thanks also to Ed Techick of Arco, Idaho, horseman and teacher of rare caliber, for all his patient instruction on the nature and training of horses and his insight into the principles of how all livestock learn.

And thanks to my wife, Susan, for all the long and dusty rides she took to take photos and help me put this book together.

Steve Cote

March 2004